Ministry of Attorney General 2002/2003 Annual Report

Introduction

In July 2001, the Attorney General initiated the Administrative Justice Project, the province's first comprehensive examination of British Columbia's administrative justice system. As part of its early work, the Project facilitated government's Core Services Review of 67 administrative tribunals and published 12 background papers and reports on a wide range of issues of interest to practitioners in the field of administrative law.

The Project's early work culminated in the release of a White Paper in August 2002 recommending more than 50 reforms to the province's administrative justice system. The White Paper, "On Balance: Guiding Principles for Administrative Justice Reform in British Columbia", the background papers and the results of the Core Services Review are posted on the Project's website at www.gov.bc.ca/ajp.

Following the release of the White Paper, the Attorney General took immediate steps to implement its recommendations. A program of law and policy reform was approved and initiated. A new office, the Administrative Justice Office, was established within the Ministry of Attorney General to lead the implementation and to develop within government a permanent centre of excellence on administrative justice reform. This is the first Annual Report of the new office.

A major reform initiative depends, for its success, on strategic partnerships that develop common goals, encourage the expression of diverse points of view and provide opportunities for resolving significant issues through consensus-building and debate. In carrying out its work, the Administrative Justice Project has been guided by these principles in consultations with government officials, tribunal members, practitioners and interested members of the public.

As it moves forward, the new Administrative Justice Office will continue to rely on invaluable contributions from interested individuals and committed organizations like the Circle of Chairs, the British Columbia Council of Administrative Tribunals, the Law Society of British Columbia and the British Columbia Branch of the Canadian Bar Association. The Office also encourages anyone who is interested in administrative justice reform to contact us at any time.

Organizational Profile

British Columbia has more than 40 independent administrative tribunals, a similar number of self-governing professional associations and a diverse array of statutory officers whose decisions affect people's everyday lives in profound ways. These decision makers work at the front line of our justice system and indeed they are often the only point of contact many people will ever have with the justice system.

Administrative tribunals were established, one tribunal at a time, over a period of more than 80 years. The first tribunal, the Workman's Compensation Board, was set up in 1916 to administer a scheme for collecting assessments from employers and adjudicating claims from injured workers.

New tribunals soon followed to meet the needs of the rapidly expanding social welfare state through a process which Norman Ward described almost forty years ago as "a comprehensive shifting of power" (The Government of Canada, R. MacGregor Dawson, (5th ed.), revised by Norman Ward, 1970, p. 266):

"Parliament discovered that it could not take over all the additional burdens which fell to its lot under this new conception of state activity, and the judiciary was also unable to bring its functions into perfect harmony with the new demands which were made upon it."

After the Second World War, the British Columbia government, like its counterparts elsewhere, embraced the concept and values of administrative decision making. Tribunals were established to provide subject matter expertise and to ensure the achievement of government's public policy objectives. In their make-up and processes, tribunals were expected to be more accessible and less costly than the courts and to provide a forum for decision making at arm's length from the day-to-day operations and pressures of government.

In the ensuing decades, statutory decision making powers were conferred upon officials with responsibilities as diverse as the Superintendent of Motor Vehicles and the Chief Forester. The mandates of administrative agencies and decision makers were rich and varied, reflecting the diversity and character of an increasingly complex system of public administration.

Administrative decisions may be made in the first instance with or without internal powers of review. They may also take the form of appeals from the decisions of other frontline officials. Administrative decisions may be appealed directly to the courts or protected by strong privative clauses intended to shield all but serious jurisdictional error from judicial review. The options open to government in designing administrative processes are limited only by specific jurisdictional constraints and by the vision, imagination and foresight of government policy makers.

Complexity and diversity have fostered inconsistencies in appointment terms and in the tenure and compensation afforded to appointees. Administrative decision makers may be appointed by Cabinet or by ministerial order. They are, at times, also drawn from within the ranks of the professional public service. There has been little consistent guidance on how appointees should be selected and on how that selection process can be made more transparent and more accountable to the wider community.

While differences and distinctions are inherent in all complex systems, when viewed from a distance, the dominant characteristic of our system of administrative justice, as it existed in June 2001, could be said to be the lack of any dominant characteristic.

Background

In July 2001, shortly after taking office, Attorney General Geoff Plant initiated the Administrative Justice Project as the first ever comprehensive review of the province's administrative justice system. This initiative was to build on the excellent work that had been done in many other parts of Canada and throughout the common law world. It was also expected to establish a platform for public law for the twenty-first century that is citizen-focused, relevant, practical, accountable, fair, affordable and accessible.

The Administrative Justice Project developed its initial recommendations for reform in two ways. First, the Project was responsible for facilitating the Core Services Review of 67 administrative tribunals. As a result of this work, 21 tribunals were replaced with internal review processes within government or eliminated. A further 27 tribunals were amalgamated, streamlined or restructured. For the most part, this work has now been completed.

The second part of the Project's reform agenda began with the release of 12 Background Papers and Reports. These materials were intended to stimulate discussion and debate within the administrative justice community. And in fact, both before and after the release of the White Paper in August 2002, many thoughtful submissions were received as part of an extensive process of consultation with interested parties. The background papers and reports, the White Paper and a summary of the written responses to it are available on the Project's website.

Goals and Objectives

On behalf of government, the Administrative Justice Office is dedicated to strengthening the administrative justice system so that:

- administrative tribunals can continue to provide high quality services and meet the needs of the people they serve;
- their administrative processes are open and transparent;

- their mandates are modern and relevant; and
- government fulfills its obligations by providing the legislative and policy framework administrative tribunals require to carry out their independent mandates effectively.

As part of government, the Administrative Justice Office is also committed to delivering affordable public services and to ensuring that, in the design of administrative processes, scarce public resources are allocated to areas where they are most needed and most likely to be effective. In this respect, the principle of proportionality is a vital tool in assessing and evaluating proposed public policy responses.

Mandate

As the primary proponent of administrative justice reform within the government of British Columbia, the Administrative Justice Office has a broad and general mandate to:

- ensure that province's administrative justice system is positioned at the forefront of administrative justice reform among common law jurisdictions, providing leadership in the development of legislation and public policy;
- identify emerging issues and trends that are likely to impact or effect government's plans and priorities for administrative justice reform;
- implement the recommendations in the White Paper;
- provide leadership and advice in the review and assessment of administrative institutions, legislative proposals and practices affecting the governance and structure of administrative tribunals;
- provide leadership and advice in the co-operative development and implementation of the policy instruments and administrative structures required to enhance the governance and accountability of British Columbia's administrative tribunals;
- oversee the development of legislative initiatives to standardize the statutory powers and procedures of administrative tribunals and to address other issues of a substantive law reform nature;
- in consultation with the Board Resourcing and Development Office, host ministries and administrative tribunals, implement an appointment process that addresses the unique needs and circumstances of administrative tribunals;
- in consultation with the central agencies of government, host ministries and administrative tribunals, implement a governance model and accountability framework that fosters the decision making independence of administrative tribunals and furthers their public accountability;
- monitor developments and practices in other common law jurisdictions, ensuring that decision makers and practitioners in British Columbia are positioned to take advantage of innovations that will enhance the overall effectiveness of the administrative justice system;

- provide the ongoing impetus for continuous improvement in the administrative justice system;
- speak on behalf of government on administrative justice issues in forums with key stakeholders, officials in other jurisdictions and members of the public; and
- report publicly through an annual report on progress to the Attorney General.

Key Issues

The tension that exists necessarily between decision making independence and public accountability is a central issue for administrative tribunals and for the governments that support them. Speaking to a meeting of the Canadian Bar Association in November 2002, the Attorney General observed that the right of individual tribunal members to deliberate freely and to decide on the merits of a case without interference, either real or perceived, lies at the heart of independence in administrative proceedings.

At the same time, government's commitment to public accountability demands openness and transparency in tribunal processes and a clear understanding about the mutual responsibilities, obligations and arrangements that exist both between host ministers and tribunal chairs and between tribunal chairs and members.

In meeting its goals and objectives and in carrying out its mandate, the Administrative Justice Office is committed to reforms that will lead to the definition and achievement of the right balance between the principles of independence and accountability across the administrative justice system. Developing these principles through consultation and consensus is fundamental to the success of the Office.

Accomplishments

The framework for the activities of the Administrative Justice Office is found in the principles developed through the Core Services Review and in the recommendations contained in the White Paper.

As a result of the Core Services Review, significant and wide-reaching organizational changes were implemented across the administrative justice system in the 2002/2003 fiscal year. In addition to contributing to the success of many of these initiatives, the Administrative Justice Office has provided leadership in the reform of the appointments process for administrative tribunals and has provided support to individual tribunals and host ministries in the development of new operating agreements.

Organizational Changes and the Core Services Review

As a government wide initiative, the Core Services Review was intended to ensure that public programs and services, including the province's administrative tribunals:

- continue to serve a compelling public purpose;
- are affordable;
- perform a legitimate and essential role;
- are the most efficient way to deliver the intended service; and
- are effective and accountable.

Across the administrative justice system, our participation in the Core Services Review was guided by a commitment to the additional following principles, namely to:

- enhance administrative decision making by directing resources to improvements in the quality and timeliness of initial decisions and by providing more opportunities for informal reviews and reconsiderations earlier in the adjudicative process;
- amend enabling legislation so administrative tribunals are able to access a full range of early dispute resolution techniques;
- foster greater certainty and finality in administrative decision making by eliminating unnecessary review and appeal processes;
- eliminate or restructure administrative tribunals where workloads were insufficient to support the development of a sufficient body of specialized knowledge and expertise; and
- structure the mandates of administrative tribunals so that they are indeed an appropriate and workable alternative to the courts.

Initial results of the Core Services Review for the administrative justice system were tabled by the Attorney General at Open Cabinet in February 2002. Across the administrative justice system:

- 12 tribunals were to be reconfigured;
- 13 tribunals were to be restructured;
- 8 tribunals were to be improved;
- 4 tribunals were to remain essentially unchanged; and
- 30 tribunals were to be subject to further review and discussion.

The implementation of recommendations from the Core Services Review continued throughout the fiscal year and its guiding principles will continue to be considered and applied as administrative tribunals are created, reformed or restructured.

A status report on the initiatives that have been taken or are planned to implement the Core Services Review decisions is included here as Appendix 1. Some of the highlights of the organizational changes that have been implemented over the past fiscal year as a result of the Core Services Review include the following:

Office for Children and Youth

On September 30, 2002, the new Office for Children and Youth was established, combining and replacing the former Office of the Child, Youth and Family Advocate and the former Children's Commission. In addition to the consolidation, the mandate of the new office has been more narrowly defined and it will be subject to a formal review and evaluation by the Attorney General within 5 years. (Office for Children and Youth Act, S.B.C. 2002, c. 50).

Employment and Assistance Appeal Tribunal

On September 30, 2002, a simplified appeal process replaced the former, multi-layered system of review and appeals under the old BC Benefits legislation. Applicants are now entitled to an internal reconsideration and an external appeal to the new Employment and Assistance Tribunal. The new tribunal, whose members are appointed as impartial adjudicators, replaces the former appeal panels, whose members included two individuals nominated by the parties and a neutral chair. (Employment and Assistance Act, S.B.C. 2002, c. 40).

Agricultural Land Commission

On November 1, 2002, a new agricultural land commission was established, providing a more effective role for regional interests in the constitution of the commission. (Agricultural Land Commission Act, S.B.C. 2002, c. 36).

Workers' Compensation Appeal Tribunal

On March 3, 2003, a new, streamlined process was adopted for the review and appeal of workers' compensation claims. The former Review Board and Appeal Division were eliminated, while the separate process for medical reviews has been integrated into the new system. The new appeal system provides a two-step process including an initial reconsideration within the WCB itself and a formal appeal, in defined circumstances, to a new, external appeal tribunal. (Workers Compensation Amendment Act (No. 2) 2002, S.B.C. 2002, c. 66).

Human Rights Tribunal

On March 31, 2003, the former Human Rights Commission was wound up and its investigative processes were replaced with a new, streamlined direct access model for human rights adjudication. By eliminating the commission and focussing resources in the new Human Rights Tribunal, issues of overlap and duplication have been addressed.

Legal advice to complainants and respondents is provided through a new clinic that is independent yet publicly funded and government, through the Ministry of Attorney General, will continue to discharge its international obligations for public education on human rights. (Human Rights Code Amendment Act, 2002, S.B.C. 2002, c. 62).

The Small Tribunals

Through various initiatives, a number of small tribunals have been eliminated including, for example, the Travel Assurance Board, the Liquor Appeal Board, the Motion Picture Appeal Board, the Mobile Home Park Dispute Resolution Committee and the Public Service Appeal Board. In eliminating these tribunals, government has established stronger internal review processes and encouraged more widespread use of early intervention and dispute resolution techniques so that as many matters as possible can be resolved with certainty and finality at the earliest opportunity.

Administrative Justice Reform and the White Paper

In the 2002/2003 year, the Administrative Justice Office continued its comprehensive process of law reform by publishing a number of new papers and reports, including its White Paper. All of the documents mentioned below are available on the Administrative Justice Project's website and have been circulated to interested parties both within and outside of the administrative justice system.

Background Papers

- Human Rights Review, Standard of Review on Judicial Review or Appeal, Administrative Agencies and the Charter and Statutory Powers and Procedures. Released in 2001/2002.
- Reviewing Original Decisions: Guiding Principles and Options, April 2002: Outlines principles for developing a review mechanism that brings together disparate policy, legal and practical factors in a comprehensive and organized way.
- Appointments: A Policy Framework for Administrative Tribunals, May 2002: Focuses on the value of an appointments process that is open, transparent and merit based and on an appropriate role for the tribunal chair in that process.

Reports in Support of the White Paper

- Charter Jurisdiction, July 2002.
- Dispute Resolution, July 2002.
- Independence and Accountability, July 2002.
- Making Sound Appointments, July 2002.

- Providing Administrative Tribunals with Essential Powers and Procedures, July 2002.
- Standing to Appear before Administrative Tribunals, July 2002.

White Paper

- On Balance: Guiding Principles for Administrative Justice Reform in British Columbia, July 2002: Details over 50 recommendations for reforms to British Columbia's administrative justice system.
- Summary of Submissions Received in Response to the Administrative Justice Project's White Paper, December 2002: Summarizes issues and concerns raised in response to the White Paper.

Appointments, Oversight and Accountability

Following publication of the White Paper, the Administrative Justice Office participated in extensive discussions with interested external stakeholders and prepared several briefings for Cabinet and Caucus on the proposed reforms and their implications across the public sector.

For the balance of the 2002/2003 fiscal year, the Administrative Justice Office turned its attention to the interrelated issues of tribunal appointments and the role of the tribunal chair in providing effective and accountable oversight of tribunal operations. In this respect, the Office has:

- developed recommendations for legislation to establish an open and transparent appointment process, based on merit;
- developed recommendations for legislation to recognize the role of tribunal chairs in the appointments process;
- addressed issues of term, tenure, compensation and termination;
- developed recommendations for clarifying the powers, duties, authority and responsibilities of tribunal chairs;
- participated in developing enhanced methods for improving the public accountability of tribunals through operating agreements between government and tribunal chairs; and
- initiated discussions to reduce and consolidate the number of host ministries that provide services and support to administrative tribunals.

By the end of March 2003, the Administrative Justice Office had:

- finalized drafting instructions for legislation to be tabled during the Spring session to address tribunal appointments and the role of the tribunal chair;
- developed, in consultation with the Board Resourcing and Development Office and the Circle of Chairs, new policies to guide the recruitment and appointment process for tribunal chairs and members;
- developed, in consultation with the Office of the Premier, new policies for compensation for administrative tribunal appointees;
- provided advice to individual host ministries and tribunals on legislative proposals to create, restructure or streamline a variety of administrative decision making processes; and
- participated in the development of model operating agreements between host ministries and tribunals and in the negotiation of several of these agreements.

A copy of the new Administrative Tribunals Appointment and Administration Act, Bill 68, Fourth Session, 37th Parliament, is included as Appendix 2. It was tabled for First Reading on May 29, 2003 and will be considered more fully in the Fall Session of the Legislature.

Upcoming Initiatives for 2003/2004

The activities of the Administrative Justice Office in the 2003/2004 fiscal year will focus on completing initiatives that are already underway, implementing the remaining recommendations in the White Paper and continuing to identify new issues of a systemic nature that are relevant to the ongoing delivery of effective and affordable administrative justice services.

The Administrative Justice Office will take the lead in working with host ministries and administrative tribunals to complete the implementation of new legislation and policy for tribunal appointments. As requested and in consultation with the Board Resourcing and Development Office, the Office will also continue to provide advice and perspectives on individual appointment practices and procedures.

The Administrative Justice Office will play a new, earlier and more formal role in the review and evaluation of legislative proposals to establish or alter administrative decision making institutions and processes. To strengthen this role and support the work of host ministries and tribunals, the Office will develop written guidelines that build on the principles articulated in the Background Paper, "Reviewing Original Decisions: Guiding Principles and Options", draw from experiences gained through the Core Services Review and reflect discussions and policy decisions that have been made to date in recent legislative sessions.

Where requested, the Administrative Justice Office will continue to work with host ministries and administrative tribunals in developing and negotiating operating agreements. The Office will also continue to explore the principles and issues that arise in reducing or consolidating the number of host ministries that provide services and support to administrative tribunals.

There are a number of emerging issues that the Administrative Justice Office is monitoring and may address, if time and resources permit. These include the application of the principles that have been developed to date to the wider administrative justice community of statutory decision makers, self governing professions and the newly created self regulating bodies. In addition, the Office continues to monitor ongoing issues about the publication of tribunal decisions and public access to their processes and deliberations. And finally, there is an ongoing need to support and enhance the excellent training programs that are offered through the British Columbia Council of Administrative Tribunals.

The primary focus of the new legislative activities of the Administrative Justice Office in the 2003/2004 fiscal year will be to address the statutory powers and procedures of administrative tribunals in a complete and comprehensive way. Work on a policy paper outlining options and recommendations is well advanced. The policy paper will be released for public comment, discussion and debate early in the summer. It will lead to detailed legislative changes to the governing statutes of most administrative tribunals. The Office expects that legislation addressing these issues will be tabled in the Spring session in 2004.

Acknowledgments

The work of a small office can only be successful with strong support and the goodwill of many individuals and organizations. Since July 2001, the Attorney General, the Honourable Geoff Plant, has been the driving force behind the work of the Office, championing its recommendations across government and in a wide variety of public forums. We are indebted to the Attorney General for his vision in leading this initiative and in providing an opportunity for committed practitioners and members of the public to come forward and share their ideas, working together to build a better system of administrative justice for individuals and communities across the province.

The White Paper and the work that lead to the release of the White Paper took place under the guidance of an Advisory Committee drawn from government and from the wider administrative justice community. The committee laboured under tight timelines, providing thoughtful insights and commentary on difficult and often complex issues.

Under the able leadership of Gillian Wallace, Deputy Attorney General, the Advisory Committee included:

Philip Bryden	Faculty of Law, University of British Columbia
Lisa Cowan	Legal Services Branch, Ministry of Attorney General
Margaret Eckenfelder	Ministry of Water, Land and Air Protection
Dianne Flood	Circle of Chairs (to April 30, 2002)
Fern Jeffries	British Columbia Council of Administrative Tribunals
Anne McFarlane	Ministry of Health Services
John Steeves	Circle of Chairs (from May 1, 2002)

The Ministry of Attorney General provided strong legal, policy and administrative support to the Office during the fiscal year. In particular the Office is indebted to Lisa Cowan, Bruce McKinnon and Brian Etheridge for their legal advice, to Susan Christie and the staff in the ministry's office for agencies, boards and commissions for their policy advice and administrative support and to other ministry staff who assisted in specific projects including Karen Horsman, Nils Jensen, Anne Preyde, Erin Shaw and Kelly-Ann Speck. Gabriella Sandor provided dedicated administrative support services to the office for most of the fiscal year.

Several contractors contributed to the reports and White Paper including Deborah Lovett, Q.C., Jill McIntyre and Angela Weltz. The Office is indebted to these individuals for their professionalism and commitment to the overall success of the Office.

The Administrative Justice Office has been a strong supporter of the University of Victoria's co-operative education program. Students from both the Faculty of Law and the School of Public Administration have spent four month work terms with the Office, contributing in very positive ways to its work. We wish to thank Melanie Friesen, Elizabeth Loughran and Katherine Waters for their timely and very helpful contributions to the Office over the past year.
